Linux - how to achieve good performance - luccastera ===== detaro comments: \- Linux performance is getting better by the day, what you are doing is something you should NOT do. You are not putting your finger on a problem. \- At least for production, I would stick to the recommended settings in the man pages and ignore "best" or "median" \- It seems that the Linux kernel is written to protect users, so you might be seeing some weird behavior. Thanks, For all guys who doing great download in this forum A: Hi i see that you posted the solution, i will like to point your mistake in your program. First your program is unable to recognize the correct format of navigation file "NWCFfile" so its throwing an exception saying as It is not possible to open this file Because "NWCFfile" was created by ".nav" format with "Navisworks" I have downloaded the "NWCFfile" and other mandatory files that you have mentioned in your post, so i have fixed that and uploaded the working executable file. You can download the "FixNWCFfile.rar" and try. If you still find any issue, let me know.
